

How to apply for a secondary school teacher position as a new education graduate in Australia

Secondary school teachers usually develop class plans to teach students specific subject areas. Therefore, you will need to choose specific field of study in your undergraduate degree. You also need to ensure that your lessons, pedagogy, and assignments meet the curriculum requirements of your state or territory. Secondary school teachers set assignments, correct and grade student work and provide feedback. You are also responsible for communicating with parents, peers and senior school management.

There are 4 main steps you will need to take to apply for a secondary school teacher position in Australia:

1: Complete high school education.

You will need to complete your Senior Secondary Certificate of Education and qualify for enrolment into a university. Higher education is a prerequisite for working as a teacher in an Australian secondary school.

2: Complete a bachelor's degree or higher education.

High school teachers usually need to have a bachelor's degree in education which focuses on their specialty area of study. Alternatively, after completing a bachelor's degree in a subject, you will then complete a master's degree in education. While studying at university, you will need to learn the best methods to tackle student growth, engage and interact with students and how as an educator you can help students.

3: Apply for registration.

To become a secondary school teacher in Australia, you must complete the registration of a state-qualified teacher. When you register, it is mandatory to have both working with children and police checks prior to approval.

4: Apply for a job.

Finding a job in Australia is not easy but there are things you can do to boost your chances of getting a teaching position. Firstly, consider the possibility of moving to an area where teachers are more in demand, this could be a rural area, or an area that has limited teachers. Secondly, if working in rural area or away from your hometown is difficult for you, you need to approach as many schools as possible by introducing yourself directly to build a good rapport. It will greatly assist your chances of getting a teaching position if you can show that you are good at your job, responsible and have a lot of experience and knowledge in your specific area of expertise.

Skills that you need to consider to become a secondary school teacher

Secondary school teachers need to have an ability to maintain control of a classroom of teenagers. Therefore, it is very important to have an effective teaching method, be fair yet able to discipline, understand teenage emotions and struggles and have great knowledge and interest in the subject of expertise. Strong interpersonal and intrapersonal skills are important as well as excellent communication skills. Secondary school teachers also require different subject-specific skills depending on their field of education.